Extended forecast – No changes to the extended forecast as a trough will move into the Pacific Northwest Wednesday and become an upper-level low-pressure system as it swings over the region Friday into Saturday. This will bring windy and much cooler conditions with highs in the 60s. The wind may gust as high as 40 mph Friday morning before the gusts decrease to 25-30 mph during the afternoon. Showers will be possible Friday morning before the system moves to the east Saturday. Sunny skies will return Sunday with highs in the low 70s.
